DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

Standing on a small knoll north of Easton between Old Rt. 50 and present Rt. 50 is a good early 19th century telescopic frame farmhouse. Like other telescopic houses of the period, it is composed of three sections diminishing in height from two and one-half stories to one and one-half to one story.

The building is constructed on a brick foundation and the walls are covered with weatherboard. The tall portion of the building is three bays long and one room deep with a central entrance on both sides, though the east side is slightly off-center. Its west facade has a late 19th century porch with Victorian entrance and two gables with Gothic arch windows. The east side has three dormers which pre-date the gables. A brick chimney rises within each gable. All of the sash has been replaced with 2/2 sash except for the dormers.

The middle wing has a door with transom and a single window on each facade. A small dormer with 4/4 sash laid horizontally pierces each side of the 'A' roof. A chimney rises within its gable. The kitchen has the same fenestration as the center part, but it is less sophisticated and the structure is longer. A chimney rises within its gable, but the back of the fireplace is exposed outside on the north gable.

Inside the original plan probably consists of a stair hall with room on each side in the tall section, and a single room in each of the other sections. From the east, the detail of the original stair can be seen and it appears to date from around the 1830's with turned intermediate newels and plain rectangular balusters.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

This house is significant architecturally as a good example of early 19th century telescopic farmhouse. It is similar to Clayland, Irish Creek although possibly a decade later. Every effort should be made to see that this building be spared when the city of Easton bulges north and builds a conference/civic center on this farm.
